SONNET FOR SARAH

Sarah is dead, the paper says. I blot
My tears and stare, white disbelief transcends
My grief, and turns my mind to youthful friends
Who thought that death belonged to age and not
To them. But when we see a road, a bike,
The briefness of a single life, we call
Upon remembrance to take us to a wall,
A Southern garden, and Sarah sitting like
A barefoot peasant girl, as if she knew
Of timelessness. We see her smile, and think
Of how she poised a moment on the brink
Of womanhood before she leapt into
The Universe, and how, perhaps, a child
Was born somewhere that day with Sarah's smile.
